Download afbeelding: Catalysis and Hydroalkoxylation of Terminal Alkynes: Synthesis of Spirocyclic Oxazolidinones and Tetrahydrofuran and Oxazolidinone Scaffolds via Alkene Nucleophilic Substrate Stabilization. The alkene-nucleophile interactions in organocatalysis have been extensively studied, and relatively well-developed and effective strategies have been found. An alternative direction in catalysis research may be the discovery of novel catalytic transformations or catalytic selectivity patterns that may be complementary to existing methods. Asymmetric alkene hydroalkoxylation is an approach that offers a new opportunity to make use of these unusual alkene-nucleophile interactions. Herein, we report that spirocyclic oxazolidinones and tetrahydrofurans can be synthesized via an alkene-nucleophile interaction in the presence of an acid-activated non-titanium hydride transition metal complex and a chiral N-heterocyclic carbene (NHC). Interestingly, the enantioselectivity is highly dependent on the alkene structure. Particularly, the reaction is highly enantioselective for terminal alkynes when quinine-type NHC is used, whereas a small amount of the opposite enantiomer is formed in the presence of an electron-donating NHC.Q: c# how to improve scanning a large file at fast speed I want to parse a large file and do some operations on it.
