This was on the same day as other local elections. All seats were contested in wards which contain a city ward and a smaller district ward, as is the case for a third of the city council. The Conservative party retained control of the council by winning 42 seats, while the Liberal Democrats won the other 30 seats. This gave the Conservatives a two-seat majority. The election saw the Conservatives increase their vote share by 1.5%, winning 39.6% of the vote, to hold control of the council. The Liberal Democrats, who had been the largest party on the council since 2002, lost their majority on the council, falling to third place on 16 seats. The Labour Party lost ground, winning only 15 seats in total, and UKIP came fifth, gaining their first ever seats on the council. The election also saw
