It works fine if this isn't set and the user has updated the security settings to disable javascript. This is a problem as I cannot find any way around this, I have searched all over the web and I am the only one having this problem. This is what the Chrome security settings look like. A: From : The Allow-Double-Click-Loading-* settings seem to disable AJAX loading altogether. Maybe that is intended behavior? After all, double-click to load is better than double-click to execute. Update : This has been resolved as an issue. You might be able to do something with a userScript like onLoad="allowDoubleClick(document.images)" (see or with Tampermonkey: Uncharted 3 would have sold the least amount of units on average, which is 2 million units. At $100 million, the game would have brought in $200 million for Take-Two Interactive. The big-budget game that impressed many viewers last year, Uncharted 3: Drake's Deception, was a disaster at the box office. According to game industry analyst Michael Pachter, the 2007 hit developer, Naughty Dog, had a huge problem. As a result, the game cost $300 million to develop and it was released in 2011. He estimates that after various costs and rebates, Naughty Dog made $80-$85 million on the game. Then, in order to recoup their costs, Take-Two Interactive released the game on multiple platforms such as the Xbox 360 and PlayStation 3 for a total of $10 million. Pachter believes Uncharted 3 would have performed much better if it had been released in 2009 or 2010 and added a sequel to Uncharted 2: Among Thieves in 2011. The analyst also mentioned that "if you had done it right, then would not have
