team. Differentiation and fate of T cells in the rat intestine. The regulation of local intestinal T cell responses to food antigens is not well understood. In this study, the differentiation and fate of T cells specific for food antigens were examined in the rat intestine. T cells from small intestine lamina propria of Ag-specific TCR transgenic (Tg) rats, in which Ag-specific T cells have been replaced by self-reactive TCR, responded to food Ags as vigorously as T cells from unmanipulated TCR Tg rats. Although a few Ag-specific T cells were detected in TCR Tg animals, Ag-specific T cells constituted 2d92ce491b
