Technical Field This invention relates to adhesives and the like, and more particularly to a metallized pressure-sensitive adhesive that provides low static cling and high adhesion to adherends. 2. Background Art Pressure-sensitive adhesives (PSAs) are useful in a wide variety of applications. They can be used to attach materials to themselves or to other materials. In other cases, they can be used in construction materials, such as labels or decorative items. PSAs are frequently constructed with pressure-sensitive adhesive compositions that use high molecular weight tackifying resins such as rosin, natural rubber, or natural latex. However, pressure-sensitive adhesives that use these resins can exhibit high static cling properties and low adhesive strength to adherends. In other cases, pressure-sensitive adhesives are constructed with crosslinked polymers, such as an acrylic or rubber. However, the use of crosslinked polymers can be difficult or impossible in certain 2d92ce491b
