What a glorious summer of 2016 it is to be here in Greensboro in the N.C.! I was given a copy of the book, “An Uncertain Faith: The Professing of a Christian Life,” by Timothy Keller and Linda Crisco. The read was a fascinating one. Keller is certainly a man of letters and a brilliant author, but his sincere passion for Jesus and mission to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom of God comes across clearly as he discusses the primacy of loving the church. We learn that there is no direct relationship between the declaration of faith in the Creed and one’s actual Christian life. It takes much more than a response to the Creed to become a Christian. In order to believe one must truly receive Jesus as Savior and Lord, and then a long, hard work of changing lives begins. No doubt we must have the courage to follow Jesus wherever he may lead us, but following him will come only as we willingly learn and do what he taught. The Protestant Reformation did away with the authority of the church for the sake of preserving the authority of the Bible, but this book challenges us to remember that the Bible is not self-sufficient. The church is a living, breathing community of believers who struggle with sin every single day, but Christ is the only hope for true peace and restoration. Christ calls each of us to be a reconciling, reconciling Christian, and the church is the means to that end. In the first chapter of the book, Keller exhorts readers to see the church as the body of Christ, not merely a means of building his kingdom. Keller says the body has authority only as Jesus gives it, not the other way around. There is only one head, only one will, only one love. This truth is truly revolutionary, because we are accustomed to seeing the church in the role of an agent. “The church is the means for God to accomplish his purposes for his world. He
