Rational design of novel therapies for multiple sclerosis will require a greater understanding of the role of cell adhesion molecules in T cell function and of the mechanisms that underlie immunological responses. In particular, the cellular interactions that occur within and among activated T cells are being investigated and the generation of selective agents that inhibit these processes would be of great value. It is well established that the alpha4 beta1 and alpha4 beta7 integrins act as cell surface receptors for fibronectin and that fibronectin is present in the lesions of experimental autoimmune encephalomyelitis (EAE). Using a murine model of EAE, we have demonstrated that the monoclonal antibody LN3G10, which recognizes the complex of alpha4 beta1 with fibronectin, inhibits induction and/or progression of EAE in the SJL mouse. Interestingly, in this model of EAE, the delayed phase of disease is particularly susceptible to the therapeutic effect of this antibody. The effect of LN3G10 on T cell adhesion, migration and T cell response to fibronectin is under investigation. Our findings demonstrate that LN3G10 specifically inhibits the development of EAE in SJL mice. Further studies into the mechanisms by which this antibody prevents the development of EAE are in progress.iPads are the best gift for a developer because they are a constant learning tool that let you become a better developer. iOS App Development with Swift Learn how to develop iOS apps using the Swift programming language. iOS Development Overview If you're developing iOS apps right now, this book is a MUST-HAVE. iOS Programming (Complete Guide) This is the most complete guide on iOS app development available. iOS App Development & Design with Objective-C Learn Objective-C to build your own custom iOS app, using your own design 2d92ce491b
