2002-2013(English)., Del., 1984). In his earlier work, Powers had a sharp criticism of psychoanalysis. He suggested that the "meaning" of dreams was a matter of "partial interpretation". He wrote: "The emotional mood of one's dream is not a universal and general idea, a universal premise, a universal truth.... As a result of this defect in Freud's philosophy, the concept of dream is forced into the absurd: it becomes the exclusive province of the psychic analyst". "There is no dream-significance which could not be interpreted in its own terms, without recourse to some other dream, even to another dream in the same dream, as long as that particular dream is not being analyzed". In regard to the older concept of the "unconscious" Powers wrote: "Dreams and concepts of the unconscious are logically unacceptable. What needs to be explained are what is normally and normally untoward.... The crucial error in the philosophy of the unconscious is to postulate that nature is 'mindless' in order to provide a rational explanation of physical events. The error is to confound the philosophical analysis of dreams and of the unconscious with the semiotic analysis of the languages of dreams".
