Germ cell-specific genes and X chromosome inactivation: detection of transcripts and protein products in mouse gonads and brain. To elucidate the function of germ cell-specific genes expressed in oocytes and spermatocytes, we analyzed several germ cell-specific mRNAs in the mouse by in situ hybridization and immunohistochemistry. Transcription of both Gnrhr and Tnp2 (B1-specific), as well as Zsp1 and Cap (A1-specific), was detected in the germinal vesicle and condensing spermatocytes, but not in postmeiotic spermatids, whereas the transcripts of Tnp1 and Sxr (B2-specific) were specifically detected in spermatozoa. Double-label immunofluorescence microscopy showed that Gnrhr, Tnp2, Zsp1, and Sxr proteins were localized to the acrosome, proacrosomal vesicles, acrosomal cap, and postacrosomal sheath of the spermatozoa. The results suggest that Gnrhr, Tnp2, Sxr, and Zsp1 are encoded in the germ cell-specific genes and play a role in sperm-egg interaction and in the formation of the spermatozoon. Interestingly, double-label immunofluorescence microscopy revealed that all five germ cell-specific proteins were localized to the X chromosome in spermatocytes and pachytene spermatocytes. These results suggest that the germ cell-specific genes and X chromosome are co-localized to a large extent during the spermatogenic process in the mouse. A new undercover video published by Project Veritas shows Democratic operatives discussing ways to bring in Russian money to influence the upcoming election. The operatives agreed that the best way to "steal" the election would be to use massive amounts of Russian money to fund an attack ad campaign on social media, stating that they would need "hundreds of millions" of dollars to be effective. Project Veritas has released a second video showing a similar discussion about voter fraud, admitting that they have plans to steal the election from Republican candidates. From Project Veritas: This week, undercover journalist James O'Keefe released
