In a patient with severe renal insufficiency due to juvenile hypophosphatemic rickets, a heterotopic bone formation was observed at the fibula and iliac crest. The lesion was diagnosed by means of a bone scintigram and could be localized by means of an x-ray picture and a CT scan. The known and possible implications of this lesion are discussed.Chronic proinflammatory reactions in neural tissue of parkinsonian monkeys. The activation of cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2) and inducible nitric oxide synthase (iNOS) and the subsequent production of proinflammatory cytokines and peroxynitrite by glial cells (microglia and astrocytes) in the substantia nigra and ventral tegmental area (VTA) of parkinsonian animals is one of the key mechanisms that may underlie the progressive neuronal loss in the substantia nigra and VTA. The glial cell activation may be induced by increased NO release from injured neurons, oxidative stress, and alterations in circulating and local cytokines. Peroxynitrite formation by NO and superoxide can then modify and damage the structure of proteins and lipids of membranes and macromolecules, including DNA, possibly contributing to dopaminergic neurodegeneration. The proinflammatory cytokines, such as TNFalpha and IL-1beta, released from glial cells and neurons, may directly contribute to the synaptic impairment observed in Parkinson's disease. In this work, we evaluated the role of inflammatory reactions in the progression of dopaminergic neuro
