Don – The Chase Begins Again 2016 DownloadQ: Threads from a ThreadPool are not killing when terminated I am using the ThreadPoolExecutor from the java.util.concurrent package. When I start the threads I set the Thread's daemon property to false, and do not send them any messages while they are alive. A callback is started when the thread has died and I want the thread pool to kill the thread. But after the thread is killed I find that none of the currently running threads are killing. Why is this happening? Note: When I first started the threads they all die as expected. A: I have managed to figure this out. The daemon threads do not get unregistered from the Thread pool and thus cannot be killed. I had to send them a Java System.exit() to forcibly kill the threads.
