The inventors wish to create a future outlook on the state of use of vaccines against Brucella in Japan, even though vaccines against Brucella are not utilized currently in Japan. For building the outlook, characteristics and validity of four global vaccines for human use against B. abortus/B. melitensis/B. suis (strains A19, S19 and 31) were collected through the literature. The advantages and drawbacks of each vaccine were examined. Information such as how well each strain is known and whether it was approved for use in domestic animals was gathered. The positive and negative aspects of those vaccines regarding antigenic variability of B. abortus/B. melitensis/B. suis were analyzed. The characteristics of the serological test system for B. abortus/B. melitensis/B. suis were also examined. As a result, new vaccines were created in order to minimize drawbacks of each vaccine. In these vaccines, B. abortus/B. melitensis/B. suis vaccines for use in domestic animals have a very important role. Further, when a new serological test system is developed, the importance of foreign commercial products is anticipated in comparison with those in Japan.Main menu Tag Archives: Cowdog Reads Post navigation Cowdog Reads will be presented by the Cornell University Research Foundation and the Literacy Volunteers of America on Saturday, Oct. 28, at 12 p.m. in Stone House Theatre, 105 W.
