Supreme Court: 'Virginity is not to be confused with purity' The media has been abuzz with the latest judgment of the Supreme Court which is a clarification of the law of rape in India. The Court has ruled that 'the lack of the prosecutrix's consent is a necessary ingredient of the offence of rape'. According to the Court, when a woman is raped by a man, her consent to have sex is not a legal defence. "A man has to first convince a woman to have sex with him. Then if she agrees, he can rape her. She cannot consent to sex and then ask her partner to spare her from the consequences of her own actions". In its judgment, the Court said that the law does not recognize the consent of a woman who is raped. The Court ruled that the consent of a woman is only relevant if she had not earlier refused the act. The Court upheld the conviction and sentence of the man for raping a 19-year-old woman and forcing her to have sex. He had been accused of raping the woman at her home in Gurgaon. The woman testified that he had forcibly taken her to a room where he raped her in the presence of her male friend. "The intercourse took place under the guise of a friendly conversation in the presence of the complainant's friend. In the light of the circumstances, the intercourse was an act of criminality". The Supreme Court was very clear about the fact that it has changed the law of rape. "Virginity is not to be confused with purity", said the Court.
