I'm writing a wrapper for the MSBuild.exe to automate deployment of applications via the command line. My problem is that I need to run msixec.exe directly from within my application, so I'm trying to create a shell from which I can execute msixec. The shell shouldn't be aware of the content of my application, it is just there to trigger the deployment process. I know you can use a CMD file but I don't want a CMD file. I want a Windows Application which will execute a shell script that calls my MSBuild script. This is what I have so far, which I put together in an hour while drinking coffee, so please be gentle :P static void Main(string[] args) 1cb139a0ed
