This article provides an overview of recent research into stereotyping (see also Wilson, 2006) and its implications for workplace and educational environments. In industrialized countries, the media has produced negative images of groups of people, including young, women, ethnic minorities, and people in old age and who have disabilities. Stereotyping can have a detrimental effect on the self-esteem of individuals (Darley & Latane, 1968; Levine & Davis, 1972) and on social relationships (Herr & Hendrick, 2003). As such, much of the research on stereotyping focuses on its impact on the lives of young and disadvantaged people (see Ahlin, 2007; Christiansen, Rothman, & Brewer, 2008; Cunningham, 2005; Goetz, 2003; Gardner, Zimet, & Sandall, 2001; Johnston, 2006; Orton, 2006; Passini, Callahan, & Terlazzo, 2006; Roset, 2004; Russell & Haynes, 2006; Sanchez, 2007; Swain & Even & Osgood, 2005; Swain, Even, & Shiu, 2006). In light of this, this article focuses on the role of stereotyping in the workplace and educational
